SC questions FSSAI, govt on food labels

THE TOP COURT QUESTIONED THE FSSAI OVER ITS RELUCTANCE TO INTRODUCE FRONT-OF-PACK WARNING LABELS ON FOOD HIGH IN SUGAR, SALT AND SATURATED FAT

NEW DELHI: How many children in India can afford dry fruits, and how many reach out for a packet of Kurkure - a mass-market packaged snack? The difference, the Supreme Court said on Thursday, is precisely why consumers, especially children, need to know what they are eating, as it questioned the Food Safety and Standards Authority of India (FSSAI) over its reluctance to introduce front-of-pack warning labels on foods high in sugar, salt and saturated fat.

"You don't want people of this country to remain healthy? More particularly growing children?" a bench of Justices JB Pardiwala and K Vinod Chandran asked the Centre and FSSAI, while underlining that India must not compromise on public health or settle for lower standards merely because Indian foods may differ from those consumed in developed countries.

The bench was particularly concerned by minutes of a recent meeting of the food regulator suggesting continued hesitation over front-of-pack warning labels, despite the Supreme Court having already asked it to consider the measure. "Are you taking the court for a toss?" asked the bench, questioning whether pressure from food manufacturers was influencing the regulator.

"There is immense pressure at the end of all these corporate houses on you. And you are succumbing to that pressure! We are doing this in public interest. Keep it in mind. We are not doing it for ourselves," it added.

The court gave the Centre and FSSAI two weeks to place their final decision on record, warning: "This is your last chance. Next time we will dictate the judgment," it said.

The bench made clear that it was not seeking to ban any particular food or dictate what consumers should eat. What it wanted was for people to have clear information before making that choice.

"In this country, how many people can afford dry fruits? And how many children buy Kurkure? That makes all the difference. We are not against any particular product. We only want the person purchasing it to know what he is consuming," it said.

The exchange came during the hearing of a public interest litigation filed by non-profit 3S and Our Health, seeking warning labels on packaged foods to indicate high levels of salt, sugar and saturated fats.

The government sought to explain the reluctance to impose such warnings by pointing to the composition of Indian foods. Additional Solicitor General Brijender Chahar, appearing for the Centre and FSSAI, said traditional Indian foods tend to contain more salt, sugar and fat than what he described as "bland" food in developed countries.

"The difficulty is that each of our traditional foods will have the red symbol on it. Whether it is namkeen etc warning that it is very harmful," argued Chahar, adding that even foods such as eggs could cross proposed thresholds for fat. He also submitted that such a system could adversely affect micro, small and medium enterprises, with about a third of MSME revenue coming from traditional foods.

But the bench was unconvinced. "Even without a red label, everybody knows there is sugar, fat, carbs etc. no? This is to create public awareness," it said, stressing the need to protect children who are increasingly consuming such products.

The court also rejected the argument that manufacturers could be affected by warning labels. "Manufacturers may not like this because it may affect their business. Even after these warnings, it's the discretion of the person who purchases it. He may still purchase it or he may not purchase. Why are you reluctant to do this?" it asked.

The confrontation over the issue comes after the Supreme Court had already expressed dissatisfaction with FSSAI's handling of the matter.

In its August 4 order, the court recorded that it was not satisfied with FSSAI's compliance affidavit and specifically asked the authority to consider front-of-package labelling, noting that such a system was "internationally prevalent", and directed it to revert within four weeks.

The issue has been pending for more than a year. The original PIL was disposed of in April 2025 after FSSAI told the court that an expert committee would recommend amendments to food labelling rules. The regulator's proposed Indian Nutrition Rating (INR) system envisaged a 0.5-to-5 star rating for packaged foods based on factors including sugar, salt, saturated fat, energy, protein and fibre, aimed at helping consumers make healthier choices.

But the process has dragged on. FSSAI said it received more than 14,000 comments on the proposal and its expert committee held five meetings, but later reported a lack of consensus on the INR format. It subsequently proposed further amendments, research, consumer surveys and wider stakeholder consultations, while the matter was deferred by the Food Authority.

The Supreme Court, however, appeared unwilling to let the consultation process become an indefinite exercise. It also rejected the Centre's suggestion that India should not necessarily seek to match international standards on food labelling.

"We do not approve the stance of the Union when it says that it is not possible to match the international standards, more particularly developed countries. Should India remain as an undeveloped country? The world should know that India is concerned about the health of its citizens and more particularly children," it said.

'Consumer panels can't be rehab centres for retired'

THE SUPREME COURT HAS ORDERED 3-YEAR PERFORMANCE AUDIT OF ALL THE CONSUMER COURTS

NEW DELHI: The Supreme Court on Thursday ordered a performance audit of consumer commissions across the country, including an assessment of the work done by former judges and judicial officers appointed to these fora, as it questioned whether they had become "rehabilitation centres" for retired people without adequate accountability.

A bench comprising Chief Justice of India (CJI) Surya Kant and justices Joymalya Bagchi and V Mohana took strong exception to reports of prolonged pendency and poor disposal of consumer disputes, saying appointments to these bodies could not be treated merely as post-retirement rehabilitation.

"Have these places become a rehabilitation centre for retired people? That is what is bothering us. You appoint retired district and high court judges and then there is no accountability. We are not willing to accept this. There has to be some kind of a performance evaluation," said the bench.

It directed the presidents of the National Consumer Disputes Redressal Commission (NCDRC) and state consumer commissions to conduct an evaluation of the performance of the commissions under their jurisdiction over the last three years and furnish reports to the court.

The court also sought a report from the president of the National Consumer Commission within two weeks detailing the total pendency, composition of the commission, average disposal by its different benches, the estimated time required to clear the backlog and whether its strength needed to be increased.

The bench's intervention came after it took note of a newspaper report highlighting the "pitiful and poor performance" of consumer commissions.

The court also asked senior counsel Gopal Sankaranarayanan, who is assisting the court as amicus curiae, to submit a separate report on the functioning and pendency of state consumer commissions, including the oldest pending cases.

During the proceedings, the bench identified two broad concerns – inadequate infrastructure and deficiencies in appointments, even as it said that the issue of accountability of those manning the consumer fora could not be ignored.

"In district commissions, the problem is of quality. They do not usually bother about the nature of the dispute and how they are decided on merits," the bench said. It further observed that while the state commissions may not necessarily have significant arrears, cases ultimately travel to the National Consumer Commission in appeal.

When additional solicitor general (ASG) Aishwarya Bhati appeared for the government, the bench said that if arrears were piling up at the National Consumer Commission, its strength would have to be increased and more benches created.

The court, however, made clear that merely increasing infrastructure or providing additional facilities would not address the problem unless there was corresponding accountability.

The government told Parliament last month that 593,109 consumer cases were pending across the country, including 16,915 before the NCDRC, 1,27,507 before state commissions and 4,48,687 before district commissions.

KERALA CM FLAGS LAPSES IN MESSI EVENT, VOWS FURTHER PROBE

THIRUVANANTHAPURAM: Kerala chief minister VD Satheesan on Thursday flagged serious charges, including Goods and Services Tax (GST) fraud and lapses in the way the private sponsor was picked by the previous Left Democratic Front (LDF) government in connection with the cancelled visit of the Lionel Messi-led Argentina national team to play a friendly match in the state.

The chief minister stated that a preliminary inquiry report submitted by the sports department is being examined and warrants further investigations. "What was the procedure adopted in selecting a private firm to sponsor the event? Was there an Expression of Interest? A firm was picked, but parameters including its source of funding and financial capability were not considered. Did the previous government know about this? There are already a lot of contradictory statements coming out," he said at a press conference.

"Let the state government examine it first. If there is a need for central agency probes, we will refer it to them. Have the State's interests been protected? Did the private firm take advantage of the situation? Everything will be examined."

Supreme Court to examine legality of facial recognition at protests

IT ALLEGES THAT FINGERPRINTS WERE COLLECTED THROUGH THE NCRB'S "ABHIGYAN" APPLICATION AND MATCHED AGAINST NAFIS.

NEW DELHI: The Supreme Court on Thursday agreed to examine whether the Delhi Police's use of facial recognition technology and biometric surveillance to monitor protesters at Jantar Mantar has legal backing, and whether such mass surveillance violates fundamental rights to privacy, dignity, free speech and peaceful assembly.

A bench comprising Chief Justice of India (CJI) Surya Kant and justices Joymalya Bagchi and V Mohana issued notice to the Centre and the Delhi Police commissioner on a PIL filed by CPI(M) Rajya Sabha MP AA Rahim, challenging the alleged use of facial recognition technology, AI-powered surveillance systems and biometric identification tools against protesters.

Senior advocate Menaka Guruswamy, appearing for Rahim, told the bench that the plea specifically challenges the Delhi Police's use of facial recognition technology against protesters and alleges that the data collected is being held by private companies.

"This is very specific prayer concerning facial recognition being used by the Delhi Police against protesters, and the data is held with private companies," Guruswamy said.

She said the surveillance involved both a facial recognition vehicle and smart glasses, with data collected without the permission of those being monitored.

"One maps your face and one is a vehicle. So, spectacles are used and a vehicle is also used. And that data is all taken without permission," she said.

The bench then directed that notice be issued and the plea be tagged with other pending petitions concerning the July 20 "Sansad Chalo" protest, which raise allegations of police excesses, including the use of pellet guns and violence against protesters and police personnel.

The petition, filed through advocate Subhash Chandran KR, claims that since the commencement of the sit-in at Jantar Mantar, thousands of protesters, journalists and ordinary citizens have been subjected to "continuous and pervasive biometric surveillance".

Rahim has sought a declaration that indiscriminate deployment of facial recognition and biometric surveillance against peaceful protesters is unconstitutional. He has also sought directions restraining the Delhi Police from deploying such technologies until Parliament enacts a law specifically authorising their use.

Among other reliefs, the petition seeks disclosure of the surveillance technologies, databases, standard operating procedures and vendor agreements used during the Jantar Mantar protest. It also seeks deletion of protesters' biometric data from the National Automated Fingerprint Identification System (NAFIS), Crime and Criminal Tracking Network and Systems (CCTNS) and allied databases.

It alleges that fingerprints were collected through the NCRB's "Abhigyan" application and matched against NAFIS.

The plea contends that there is no law authorising biometric surveillance of people participating in a lawful protest. It argues that neither Delhi Police standing orders governing protests nor the Criminal Procedure (Identification) Act, 2022 permits such surveillance of peaceful demonstrators.

The petition relies on RTI responses obtained from the Delhi Police to claim that no privacy impact assessment was conducted before the surveillance was undertaken. It alleges that an 80% similarity score is treated as a positive facial recognition match, despite the absence of any publicly available validation of the threshold.

It also claims that the Delhi Police's stated use of facial recognition technology is limited to tracing missing persons and identifying deceased persons, rather than policing peaceful assemblies.
